Collection Summary

Title: Herbert M. Frisby Papers
Collection #: 1979.1, 1984.1, 1995.6, and 2014.3
Dates: 1854 - 1984
Creator: Frisby, Herbert M. (Herbert Milton), 1886-1983
Language: English
Location: Off-Site Storage for Banneker-Douglass Museum
Abstract: Herbert Frisby was the second African American to reach the North Pole – a contemporary to Matthew Henson, the first African American to reach the North Pole. Frisby was a war correspondent for the Afro-American Newspaper during World War II; a biology teacher in Baltimore, Maryland; a historian; and an advocate for Maryland's African American community.

Administrative Information

Provenance

The papers of Herbert M. Frisby were given to the Banneker-Douglass Museum in 1979 by Herbert Frisby with the assistance of his grandson, H. Russell Frisby, Jr.

Processing History

The collection was processed at various times throughout BDM's history which created multiple accession numbers (1979.1, 1984.1, and 1995.6). In 2014, Frisby's grandson, H. Russell Frisby, Jr. (a Commissioner with the Maryland Commission on African American History and Culture). A preliminary inventory was completed in 1995 but it did not include the archives, only the photographs and objects. Between 1995 and 2011, the collection had been accessed at various times for museum projects. The collection was processed beginning in 2011 and completed in 2016. The archives and library of Herbert M. Frisby were arranged and described in 2017.

Acquisition History

The Herbert Frisby Collection and Archives were gifted to the Banneker-Douglass Museum in 1979 by Herbert Frisby and facilitated by BDM's first executive director, Carroll Greene. In 2014, several additional items were donated by Frisby's grandson, H. Russell Frisby, Jr.

Biographical Notes

Herbert Milton Frisby

Herbert Milton Frisby was born in 1886 to Ida and Joseph S. Frisby in the southern part of Baltimore, Maryland. He attended a segregated primary school and Baltimore's Colored Public High School (now Frederick Douglass High School). Despite his parents receiving only eighth grade educations, Frisby valued learning and developed a lifelong passion for science and exploration while watching his teacher conduct science experiments in class.

He graduated from high school in 1905 then attended Howard University where he graduated in 1909 with a Bachelor of Arts. He worked his way through college by playing in a jazz band, working as a butler, and selling peanuts. After graduating from college, Frisby began a teaching career of over thirty years at Frederick Douglass High School. While at Douglass, Frisby initiated a variety of programs and special projects, which included teaching general science courses for junior and senior high school students, setting up incubators, teaching students how to hatch and raise 1,100 chickens, and selling the chickens to pay for science equipment. Under his direction as head of the science department, Frisby promoted the first local science fair, which became a statewide event. After teaching for 30 years, Frisby became principal of the Douglass High School and later taught at Coppin State College.

In 1915, Frisby married Annie Russell, who was his high school sweetheart. Annie came from a well-to-do African American family on the west side of Baltimore. The couple had one son, named H. Russell Frisby, Sr., who later married Kathryn Frisby and had one son H. Russell Frisby, Jr.

In 1964, Morgan State University (then Morgan State College) honored Frisby with an honorary Doctor of Laws Degree, partly for "continuous research" in the arctic regions of the world. A year later, the Herbert M. Frisby Society was founded by former Maryland State Delegate Lena King Lee and a group of women who were concerned with preserving African American history in the state. One of Frisby's greatest community honors was awarded when the city of Baltimore, named March 6, 1977 as Herbert M. Frisby Day.

His favorite past times included playing the piano and bird watching. Herbert Frisby died in 1983.

War Correspondent

The onset of World War II enabled Herbert M. Frisby the unique opportunity to explore the Arctic and follow in Matthew Henson's footsteps. He entered the army at the age of 57. Previously, he had worked closely with Carl Murphy on projects and after a great deal of persuading, Murphy selected Frisby to be a correspondent. Using his skills in science, research, and writing, Frisby became an Arctic correspondent for Baltimore's Afro-American Newspaper during the summers of 1943 and 1944. Frisby began his journey in the United States Army as a captain and was assigned by request to Alaska and the North West Service Command. His theatre of operations included Canada, Alaska, and the Aleutian Islands, and he was promoted to the rank of major in 1944.

Travelling by plane, ship, and jeep, he reported on the work of African American troops, which at the time made up ten percent of the American Military during World War II. His writing focused on the experience of African American soldiers in Arctic regions, especially on ways in which black soldiers adjusted to living in areas with exceedingly colder climates than usual. During those two summers, Frisby visited Hudson Bay, the Aleutian Islands, and beyond the Arctic Circle to Kotzebue, Alaska.

For the duration of the war, the American Military had the task of securing Alaska and the Arctic from Japanese invasion; and during Frisby's tour, the American troops built bases that made the continent secure from invasion. As a result, when the Japanese did attempt to invade the Aleutian Islands, they were defeated and ousted from the region. Herbert Frisby's account of World War II appeared in the book This is Our War, published in 1945 by the Afro-American Newspapers. After the war ended, Frisby stayed in the Northern region as an Arctic correspondent until 1949.

Arctic Travel

Beginning with his military service in 1943, Frisby made numerous trips to the Arctic region for research and exploration. His travels took him to Alaska, Labrador, Greenland, Arctic Canada, Spitsbergen, the Soviet Union and Siberia, and the North Pole. In 1957, Frisby was the only American scientist on a European expedition to the Svalbard Islands – Norwegian islands in the Arctic Ocean between mainland Norway and the North Pole. During this voyage, Mr. Frisby bonded with the natives by learning traditional customs and sharing in their daily lives.

Thirteen years later, Frisby received permission from Russian government officials to travel abroad to Siberia. After obtaining the proper documents, Frisby and a team of scientists from the University of Alaska explored the Siberian Arctic Regions. His many glacial travels allowed him to acquire a large collection of Arctic artifacts, including rare Inuit ivory, soapstone, fossilized whalebone, carvings, and graphic art creations.

Throughout many of his travels, Herbert M. Frisby was the first African American that natives (called both Inuits and Eskimos by Frisby) had ever met. He developed a trusting relationship and even became an honorary member of one of the local tribes. He frequently traveled with cigarettes, balloons, and bubblegum to trade with the local people and to entertain the children. Over the course of his lifetime, Herbert Frisby would make twenty-six trips to the Arctic region.

Contemporary of Matthew Henson

Herbert Frisby was a long-time admirer of fellow African American and Arctic Explorer Matthew Henson, who was a travel companion to Admiral Robert E. Peary. Matthew Henson was born August 8, 1866 in Nanjemoy, Maryland to sharecroppers who had been free prior to the Civil War. At the age of 12, Henson worked as a cabin boy for Captain James Childs. Childs taught Henson how to read and write and gave him his fundamental knowledge of exploration. Under the direction of Captain Childs, Henson travelled to China, Japan, the Philippines, France, Africa, and southern Russia.

Henson began working with Commander Peary in approximately 1890 as his assistant, partially due to his experience with Captain Childs. Henson later accompanied Admiral Peary on several excursions including the attempt in 1909 to reach the North Pole. It is believed that Matthew Henson reached the Pole on April 6, 1901 before Peary.

Efforts to pay tribute to Henson were spearheaded by the Matthew Henson Memorial Project, a venture organized by Frisby in 1949, honoring Henson across the state and the country. In addition to securing Henson an invitation from President Eisenhower to visit the White House in 1954, Frisby's efforts led Maryland Governor J. Millard Tawes to declare April 6, 1959 – the 50th Anniversary of the discovery of the North Pole — Matthew Henson Day. In 1961, state residents witnessed the installation of the Matthew Henson memorial tablet, the first state-sponsored memorial to an African American, inside the Maryland State House. The following year, Baltimore City School #29 was renamed Matthew Henson Elementary School.

On August 12, 1956, Herbert M. Frisby accomplished his greatest feat which took nearly five decades to complete. With military approval, he achieved his life-long dream when he extended his arm through a small access door aboard a B-52 U.S. Air Force plane, and deposited two steel boxes upon the frozen terrain of the North Pole. The contents of the first box contained a U.S. flag, a Maryland State Flag, a photograph of African American explorer Matthew Henson, two articles written by Frisby which appeared in Baltimore's Afro-American Newspaper, and a bronze seal of the state of Maryland.

Home Museum

At home in Baltimore, due to his frequent travels, Frisby was known as a “Renaissance Man,” bringing the Arctic to his neighbors, family, and friends. His home at 3403 Bateman Avenue, lovingly called The Igloo, served as a mini-Arctic museum, showcasing furs, photographs, and other objects collected throughout his travels. He also toured the Maryland, Washington, D.C., and Pennsylvania corridor, speaking about his Arctic travel and military service at local schools, social organizations, and churches.

Organization of the Herbert Frisby Collection

This collection is arranged in eighteen series and the material in all series are arranged alphabetically. For material that required subdivision, most are alphabetically but some (e.g. Arctic: News Correspondent News Clippings) are arranged chronologically to provide a more narrative structure. The series are:

- African American History, 1854-1979
- Alaska, 1931-1980
- Arctic, 1923-1979
- Canada, 1936-1978

Scope and Content Note

The Herbert Frisby Archives spans 130 years – Frisby often purchased historic documents and items were collected by his family and associates from the Herbert Frisby Historical Society after his death.

In his later years, Frisby sought to assure that his collection would be preserved and maintain by future generations. With the help of his grandson, H. Russell Frisby, Jr., the Banneker-Douglass Museum was selected as the final home for his research, collection, and library. Frisby had previously worked with Senator Verda Welcome, who was actively involved with the Banneker-Douglass Museum and the Maryland Commission on African American History and Culture. Part of the collection was donated in 1979 and the remainder of the collection was donated in 1984, a year after Frisby's death.

Frisby's interests varied which contributed to an eclectic collection that did not solely focus on Arctic travel. He was interested in current events, especially those effecting African Americans in Maryland, educating others, and furthering his own education.

Herbert Frisby's own arrangement of the collection was kept intact with only slight modifications where the original order could not be determined. Much of the collection is made up of newspaper and magazine clippings saved by Frisby from publications that he regularly subscribed to and then categorized based on his filing system.

The African American History in the collection includes information focusing on the national Civil Rights Era as well local issues relating to African American history in Maryland. Frisby was a subscriber to African American magazine subscriptions and local newspapers and would categorize articles based on subjects (including racism, segregation/integration, slavery, discrimination, etc.) under African American History. He would also actively seek out speeches by made by or about the African American experience.

The Alaska collection encompasses activities that were solely based in or about the 49th state including the Alaskan oil pipelines, Alaskan statehood, Frisby's travels in Alaska, and the University of Alaska where Frisby studied for a summer. Like with other collections, Frisby saved newspaper and magazine articles regarding Alaska or that were published in Alaska. Frisby was particularly interested the African American experience in Alaska and collected issues of the Alaska Spotlight Newspaper which was an African American newspaper based in Anchorage, Alaska.

The Arctic collection contains items that could not be defined as strictly Alaska or Canada because of cross-overs. Frisby often referred to his travels as "Arctic Travels" because he would cross over multiple borders during any given trip. As a war correspondent for the Afro-American Newspaper, he often used the term "Arctic" to describe his entire journey for readers. He also included all native peoples in the Arctic category, which he referred to as Eskimo (a term that is used in the Finding Aid due to Herbert Frisby's designation to maintain provenance). He was particularly interested in these cultures, learning their customs, studying their language, and educating himself on their way of life.

Frisby also included his military service in the Arctic category because his assignment was to both Alaska and the Northwest Command which had stations throughout the Canadian region. He was particularly interested in the idea that integration possibly occurred in the military before it was nation-wide. He regularly wrote about and researched integrated platoons stationed in the Arctic.

A lot of his focus was on the Alcan Highway (sometimes referred to the Alaska Highway depending on location) and the Signal Corps troops that built it. In 1942, the Army Corps of Engineers assigned more than 10,000 men to build the Alaska Canada Military Highway. About a third was black soldiers: members of three newly formed "Negro regiments" the corps accepted for the job because it had no choice, other engineering units were dispatched to the Pacific theater.

Beyond Frisby's interest in the Arctic, he was captivated by Canada's natural beauty and used his Arctic trips as an opportunity to learn about Canada. He frequented different tourist attractions throughout Canada and would save souvenirs from his travels. He particularly enjoyed the Fur Trappers' Annual Festival in Manitoba which he visited while he was a correspondent for the Afro-American Newspaper.

During most of Frisby's adult life, he kept careful record of all Correspondence he received and sent which he included in his donation to the Banneker-Douglass Museum. This portion of the collection is a combination of both personal and professional correspondence and organized based on Frisby's original organizational structure. Many of the items in this portion of the collection could fit in multiple categories, but all attempts were made to keep them in their original structure.

While the majority of this collection dealt was a result of his research and travel, he also kept correspondence with or about his family. He also kept any correspondence that dealt with his speaking engagements, particularly those at local educational institutions and from appearances on television, including the Arnold Zenker Show and the show To Tell the Truth on the CBS network.

In 1965, a local Maryland politician, Delegate Lena K. Lee, founded the Herbert M. Frisby Historical Society that was dedicated to preserving the history of African Americans in Maryland as well as Frisby's legacy. The organization created an exhibition entitled the Black Presence in Maryland: A Historical Exhibit that was displayed at the Maryland Historical Society in 1974 and published the work Dreams He Dared to Dream in 1978 that told the story of Herbert Frisby's accomplishments. This portion of the collection also includes biographies on the original members compiled by the Herbert M. Frisby Historical Data Committee. A portion of this collection contains programs, stationary, and other ephemera that was printed by the Society.

Because of Herbert Frisby's work regarding the legacy of Matthew Henson, one section of this collection is dedicated solely to Henson. Frisby oversaw the Matthew Henson Memorial Project whose goal was to award Henson with recognition for his role in the discovery of the North Pole and to place a permanent memorial for Henson in the Maryland State House. Frisby saved any and all information regarding Henson and it is believed that Frisby found the location of Matthew Henson's birthplace in Nanjemoy, Maryland.

The Occupation portion of this collection is a culmination of all of Frisby's accomplishments. While he served as an educator and a war correspondent, Frisby also marketed himself as a lecturer, collector, writer, and audio/visual expert, all of which were documented in his extensive resumes and curriculum vitae found in this section.

Smaller parts of this collection included information about Educational Institutions where Frisby either worked or attended as a student; Health related materials for better living; the Maryland Commission on African American History and Culture (the organization that oversaw the donation of Frisby's collection to the Banneker-Douglass Museum; the State of Maryland; Organizations that Frisby's was involved in; People/Personalities he admired or had researched; Personal documents; assorted Travel documents; and other Miscellaneous papers.

Frisby also had an extensive Audio collection which was the result of his hobby as an Audio Caster. He recorded numerous interviews, programs, conversations, and other miscellaneous sound recordings for his records. These items have not been processed.
